AUGUST 2025

OUR AMAZINGLY HELPFUL MARKET UPDATE

KELLY'S HOT TAKE

It's August. People are on holiday. But of course, not everyone is on holiday all month, and the world of Shared Ownership is still turning. We've had a busy July, with 1,100 reservations, and we're very much hoping the benefits of all the work we did to overhaul our service model (more on that below, but – spoiler alert – our SLAs are better than ever, and our customer reviews are industry leading! Just saying).

And talking of overhauls, we've been thinking: we really do need to review our maximum annual income cap. Plenty of food for thought below.

Kelly McCabe
TMP The Mortgage People

AT A GLANCE: DASHBOARD

31
ACTIVE LENDERS IN 30

28
90% LENDERS

33.30%
AVERAGE SHARE TAKE-OUTS

6
SUB-25% LENDERS

4%
BANK OF ENGLAND BASE RATE

EQUITY LEVELS (AGAINST SEASONAL EXPECTATIONS)

LOWEST FIXED RATES

The latest figures from our list of lenders.

25% LTV

2 year	Barclays - 4.29%
5 year	Newbury - 4.29%
10 year	Barclays - 4.39%

50% LTV

2 year	Barclays - 4.29%
5 year	Nationwide - 4.33%
10 year	Barclays - 4.3%

75% LTV

2 year	Nationwide - 5.09%
5 year	Nationwide - 4.34%
10 year	Nationwide - 4.39%

TOP LENDERS THIS MONTH

The lenders with the lowest rates – shouldn't they be the busiest lenders? Not in SO necessarily. Here, rates are just one part of the equation.

THIS MONTH UNDER THE MICROSCOPE

Holding special adverse credit

Yes, we've had a few lenders who haven't offered: get online adverse credit. It's perhaps not the sunniest of topics for a summer's day, but it's an important one – and perhaps one we don't explore enough in the context of Shared Ownership.

As we all know, many fifth already work with lenders who have more flexible criteria: circumstances – and rates have updated their policies to reflect today's realities. Lovely stuff.

But sunnier skies, exposure to adverse credit still very. Some policies are more flexible. Others remain quite restrictive. And that opens up a question. Why?

What's driving those differences? Are we, as a sector, confident that we're striking the right balance? Are we, as a sector, open to the idea of lending to people with CCJs? Because when it comes to adverse credit, numbers are worth paying attention to.

What does 'adverse' mean in 2025?

Once upon a time, having adverse credit suggested financial recklessness. But that was a different time. A time before COVID. Today, it might mean a single late payment. A bounced direct debit. Or something bigger, like a life event – redundancy, illness, divorce – that temporarily knocked someone off course. The kind of events that can happen to all of us.

At TMP, we've been the reality up close. 16% of the people we've helped into Shared Ownership were form of adverse credit in the past six years. That's almost one in six. And when you look at the broader market in the UK, numbers are just as striking. According to a recent report from Which?, 1.5 million CCJs are live, and the Exchange contributed to – 16% of all home-buying applications include someone with recent adverse credit.

So this isn't niche – it's normal. And yet, Shared Ownership still – and this sometimes surprises a crowd of 'generally' – seems to treat 'adverse' as a risky.

Different policies, different outcomes

So what's the thinking behind this?

What do the more flexible lift see that others don't? Is it a different perception of risk? Or is it a different appetite for opportunity? Is it a recognition that the world has changed – and that old definitions of creditworthiness may no longer apply?

If you're in a role where you help shape policy, it might be worth asking: Why do we say no? Is there more we could be doing to empower one-off circumstance plan from permanent, habitual problems?

Because often, it's not the lender saying no.

Unintended consequences

From a lending perspective, mild to moderate adverse credit is manageable. Especially as mortgage offer in fact, lenders have stepped up in this space in recent months (or perhaps years, actually). It's not challenge is getting those applications initiated – and that's often where TMP policy comes into play.

Lenders know this too. That's why many haven't just kept their doors open to applicants with. In the adverse space there's a sense that the market won't use them. But does that reflect the reality?

If we're unintentionally closing the door to customers who've recovered from past setbacks, we risk limiting access to homeownership for people who might otherwise thrive in it.

Tide is turning

There are some encouraging signs of change. Some lenders have started to think previously took a hard line on adverse are now softening their stance. More and more we're hearing "It's on – even with a bit of adverse." That kind of flexibility would've been unthinkable not long ago.

But our sector as a whole doesn't yet reflect that shift. Some lenders are still hard line any adverse as a reason to say no – other than to homeowners who have managed to get a different yes.

It's understandable. These policies were created in a different era, with different risks in mind and the best intentions. But the world has moved on. Austerity, COVID, and the cost-of-living crisis have reshaped the multifaceted more common and, I think, forgiving.

That context matters.

It's perhaps time to be more purposeful

At TMP, we talk a lot about habitual vs. circumstantial. It's a distinction that can help us to offer a more sufficient which recovered, learned and is ready to move on. Pepper's data backs this up. Reformed adverse borrowers are often less likely to default again than those who've never had credit issues. And even if a financial rear bottom, you tend to work hard to avoid a repeat. So why penalise people for getting back on their feet?

The lenders are already adapting. The appetite to support more customers exists. The solutions are out there.

So maybe this is a moment to pause and reflect. If you're involved in shaping or applying adverse credit policy, it might be worth asking whether your approach truly reflects the reality of today's buyers. Are we distinguishing between one-off setbacks and long-term issues? And are we giving people a chance to rebuild? Why not – perhaps we can learn from MPs who've had to deal with the aftermath of expenses.

The outcomes speak for themselves – and there's also a moral imperative, too, understanding the data, and asking how we can make ourselves more responsive to the problems they affect.

Because saying no to a mortgage isn't just a financial decision. It's saying no to stability. No to a home. No to the chance to build equity and a better future. And people don't stop trying – they just look elsewhere.

The lenders are moving. Maybe it's time we moved too.

TALKING POINTS
CAN WE BUILD A BOUND SHARED OWNERSHIP, SUPPORTED BY THE EXCHANGE

"If you don't own your own home, and can't turn to your family for help, how can you be expected to save up for a mortgage when more and more of your money is going on rent?

"Ultimately, it's crucial that more homes are built... But, when the prospect of owning a home is an aim for so many people, it is essential we examine the ways in which we help them to achieve that."

Florence Eshalomi, chair of the Housing, Communities and Local Government (HCLG) Committee, which has opened an inquiry into the barriers to homeownership.

"Shared Ownership has a role to play in supporting households into home ownership, but we are aware of the challenges faced by some who have entered the scheme.

"We are considering what more can be done to improve the experience of Shared Owners, and this includes how we can help them tackle rising costs. This is alongside consulting this year on the Shared Ownership model, to ensure it is fit for the future and delivers for those who need it."

A spokesperson for the Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government, responding to recent negative newspaper reports on Shared Ownership.

SNAPSHOT: WIDER MARKET

Some regions are reporting more brisk levels of activity in the sales market, which is especially positive considering the continued economic turbulence and rising mortgage rates. Nationwide's latest House Price Index is the latest to bring mixed messages: while it says the market has been relatively resilient and inquiry further market uplift over the coming months on a wider scale."

Nathan Emerson, CEO at Propertymark, commenting on the wider housing market in his most recent update (est. August '25). Credit and thanks to Propertymark.

DATA DIVE: HOUSE PRICE INDEX

As of May 2025, the average house price in the UK is £292,000, and the index stands at 765. Property prices have risen by 2.1% compared to the previous month, and risen by 4.2% compared to the previous year.

TMP TEAM TALK

We're on fire

We mentioned how we've overhauled our service model back in July '24. That was down to a major upgrade that has seen us restructure our teams completely, institute AI within our processes and generally re-energise how we do everything. It came off the back of last year's CFG changes and it has set the tone for a new way of working.

And we're happy to report: it's very, very much working. Document turnaround times are sublime. Our SLAs are better than they've ever been. As an example, our latest SLA for working on leads is within 24-48 hours and 98% will say we're completely satisfied with that. Plus, our Feefo ratings are an excellent 4.9/5.

So...

If you're not working with us and if you're looking for amazing SLAs, a personalised service from your own dedicated team, and industry-leading reviews from thousands of happy customers (just like yours), contact Kelly McCabe directly: kellym@tmpmortgages.co.uk

A TED TALK WITH... VIKKI MACGREGOR

Let's take a link to dig into the minds of what our fantastic Key Account Manager (KAM) does all day. Everyone, meet Vikki!

Can you give us an overview of your working day?
Most days are a bit of a whirlwind – calls, mortgage applications, client catch-ups and chasing. I've chattin' and more! Now that I've been in the role for a while, I've got my routine down, but I'm an early bird, so I'm fast, we're without guess. I'll give you more time to focus on reaching out to qualify new leads and nurturing the clients we have at a regular application stage.

What's your strategy for getting your job done well?
For me, it's all about staying organised, keeping a clear head, and setting with whatever the day throws at me. I like to start each day with a plan, but I'm also open to changing it up if something more urgent comes in.

What are your favourite bit of the job?
I would say my favourite bit is helping clients navigate the process, and turning something that can feel stressful into something more straightforward (and maybe even enjoyable). It's always rewarding when things click into place for someone and you've been a part of that.

What are the main ways in which your role and tasks have changed since you started?
Oh, loads! My role has changed a lot over the three years I have been in CKM – there's always something new to learn, whether it's a system update, a new rule to follow, or a fresh process to get to grips with. It keeps things interesting though and I've definitely had to be flexible and adapt quickly. I've also built up my confidence massively, and I've found new ways to do things better than most. Other than that, it is keeping my children alive!

Favourite holiday destination?
I love Portugal, especially Quarteira and Australia. I'm lucky enough to have family in Western Australia – last time we went, we bossed it with a one- and three-year-old and flew home on the day they turned 4 and 1. Another lockdown came into force. We landed like a very tired.

What's your signature dish to cook?
Meaty chilli and homemade salsa! (Based on a recipe I brought back from Mexico, but I've made it my own. I've also got a lasagne linguini, with the cream cucumber on the side of their plates.

What's one surprising thing that people don't know about you?
I am petrified of dogs 🐶 which might be the discredit of my gardening career. Honestly, I'm absolutely terrified. I've been chased by a dog, I've found one in my Crocs, I cannot cuddle! go cue that dog!

HOUSE-SHARING WITH JO

And because life's not all about work, work, work, here's our latest sneak peek into the home lives of Team TMP. This time, our superstar Client Account Manager, Joanna Pasion.

What's your hobby – and what do you like about it?
I love to read and I'm always reading a book. Currently, I'm my current obsession is gardening and ordering all the plant samples! Then there's dog walks with our nine-year-old springer spaniel, Bailey. I'm also a big fan of cooking and baking, though we're better than most. Other than that, it is keeping my children alive!

Favourite holiday destination?
I love Portugal, especially Quarteira and Australia. I'm lucky enough to have family in Western Australia – last time we went, we bossed it with a one- and three-year-old and flew home on the day they turned 4 and 1. Another lockdown came into force. We landed like a very tired.

What's your signature dish to cook?
Meaty chilli and homemade salsa! (Based on a recipe I brought back from Mexico, but I've made it my own. I've also got a lasagne linguini, with the cream cucumber on the side of their plates.

What's one surprising thing that people don't know about you?
I am petrified of dogs 🐶 which might be the discredit of my gardening career. Honestly, I'm absolutely terrified. I've been chased by a dog, I've found one in my Crocs, I cannot cuddle! go cue that dog!

YOUR AMAZINGLY HELPFUL MORTGAGE PARTNERS

18+
YEARS IN THE BUSINESS

70+
OF PARTNERSHIPS

We know the Shared Ownership sector better than any other mortgage broker.

Along with our famously human approach, that wealth of experience is the key to TMP's success. Accurately evaluating your customers, matching them with their perfect mortgage and guiding them along the home-buying process from initial assessment to point of exchange is all part and parcel of what we do best.

LET'S TALK ABOUT WORKING TOGETHER

0800 4880 814
chrisy@tmpmortgages.co.uk
tmpmortgages.co.uk/housing-associations

Prepared by The Mortgage People (TMP) Ltd, Kingsgate House, 66-68 Tunbridge Wells, Kent, TN1 1ES. TMP is a trading name of Chrisy Mortgages Ltd which is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority.